THE MOVE

Ask if they want advice -> Wait for yes -> Give it once -> Stop

START HERE

Before giving advice, ask: 'Would it be useful to hear my view on that?' Wait for the answer. If yes, give your advice once and stop.

SAY THIS

Ask Permission	"Would it be useful to hear my view on that?"
Give Once and Stop	"My view is X — that is it."
Quick Permission Asks	"Want a thought on that?"
Workplace Permission	"Would a recommendation from me be useful here, or is this one yours to work through?"
Advice Repair	"I jumped straight to advice there — I should have asked first."

AVOID

- In emergencies where there is no time for permission — give the critical information immediately.
- In professional contexts where giving advice is literally your role (consultant, doctor, manager giving direction).
- When the permission question itself would feel clinical or awkward in a close personal relationship.

REMEMBER

The question is only real if no is a fine answer.
