

Core move

Start with one sentence naming a real shared context, then make entry easy.

Minimum viable move

Name the shared context in one ordinary line, then give the other person an easy way to enter: "Looks like we are both waiting for the same session. I am Sam."

Field tip

A contextual opener works because it begins with shared reality. You do not need a clever first line when the room, task, timing or previous thread already gives you a bridge. Field tip: The safest opener is often a boringly accurate one. Name what is already true, make entry easy, and let the other person decide how much conversation they want.
