THE MOVE

Pause after key exchange -> Mirror what you understood -> Check accuracy

START HERE

After any exchange where misalignment is possible, say: 'What I understood from that is X — is that right?' Then listen.

SAY THIS

Summary Checks	"What I am taking away from this is..."
Check Invitations	"Tell me if I have that wrong."
Quick Checks	"So Thursday, not Friday?"
Warm Mirrors	"What I am hearing is that you are exhausted, not that you want to quit — is that closer?"
High-Stakes Confirm...	"Before either of us leaves this room: my understanding is we are committing to the March date. Confirm?"

AVOID

- In casual conversations where paraphrasing would feel clinical or overly formal.
- When you genuinely understood and a summary check would waste the other person's time.
- In some cultures and relationships where it signals distrust or condescension.

REMEMBER

Summarise their version, not your preference.
