

Impact High · Difficulty Easy-Medium · Misuse risk Performing a fake soothing voice that sounds patronising, clinical or seductive

THE MOVE

Formula: breath reset + slightly slower first line + warm interest + clean ending. -> Greeting: "Hey, good to see you." (slower, relaxed, genuine) -> Question: "How has your week actually been?" (curious, not interrogating) -> Request: "Quick ask — ?"

START HERE

Lower the tension, slow slightly, and add warmth to your first sentence before you respond.

SAY THIS

Greetings / openings	"Hey, good to see you."
Warm curiosity	"I'm curious how you're seeing it."
Shy / guarded person	"No pressure to answer in detail."
Requests / action	"Quick ask — could you send that by Friday?"
High-status / busy people	"I'll keep this brief."
Disagreement / feedback	"I see why that's the concern."

AVOID

- You are using warmth to hide pressure, disappointment or a hidden agenda.
- The situation requires urgency, crisp instruction or safety-critical direction.
- The other person is distressed and your tone tips into cheerful or minimising.

REMEMBER

Warmth is subtraction, not addition.
