

THE MOVE

Elicit -> Provide -> Elicit -> Elicit: "What do you already know about this?" or "Would it help to hear one option?" -> Provide: one clear point, briefly — "The main thing is X." -> Elicit: "What do you make of that?" or "How does that fit you..."

START HERE

Run one light loop silently: ask whether an option would help, give one clear point, then ask what they make of it — without ever naming the framework.

SAY THIS

Opening elicits	"What do you already know about this?"
Asking permission	"Would it be alright if I shared what I've seen work?"
Providing briefly	"The main point is this — the rest is just support."
Closing elicits	"What do you make of that?"
Softening and checking	"Let me check that was actually useful, not just tidy."
Advice under pressure	"This is your call — I'll offer what I know, then step back."

AVOID

- You intend to ignore their response anyway
- A brief, direct instruction is what's actually needed
- Physical safety or an emergency takes priority

REMEMBER

Scaffolding, not the conversation.
