THE MOVE

Cue + soft marker + optional invitation + room. -> You said you left pretty suddenly. If you're comfortable sharing, what led up to that? -> You lit up when you mentioned that project. How did that start? -> That sounds like a real turning poi...

START HERE

Notice a genuine story cue, offer one warm, low-pressure invitation - "What's the story behind that?" - then stay quiet and let them choose how much to tell.

SAY THIS

Quick openers	"What's the story behind that?"
Social & rapport	"How did that become a thing for you?"
Work & decisions	"What led to that decision?"
Direct invitations	"What happened there?"
Permission-first (sen...	"Only if you want to go into it, what led up to that?"
Recovery & release	"No need to go into it - I was just curious about the context."

AVOID

- They have signalled they do not want to talk about it.
- The topic is visibly painful and you do not have enough trust or time.
- The setting is public and the answer could expose them.

REMEMBER

A story invitation works best when it sounds like respect for context, not hunger for detail.
